

Moderation in Education

Friday 5th December
2014

As parents we want our children to excel in all aspects of education as we realise that through education success is achieved in this world and the next. However sometimes we may overburden our children with too much work. There is much wisdom behind the saying "work hard play hard". As muslims, we should always follow a middle path and avoid extremes as Allaah SWT has said;

"Thus have We made of you a moderate nation..." (2: 143)

A child needs a certain amount of time to play each day in order to be refreshed when they return to their studies. Without this break they may come to dislike the very education in which lies their ultimate success. Sometimes as adults we have forgotten what it was to be a child or maybe we try to give our children the childhood we wish we had in terms of education.

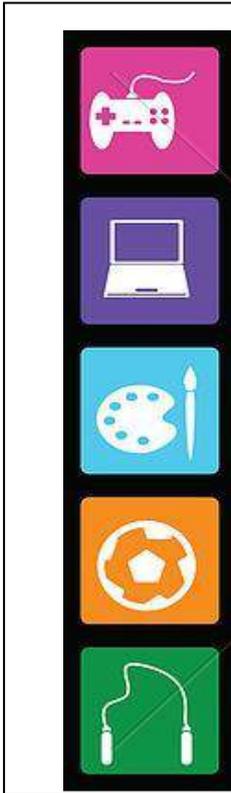

There is a famous Arabic saying: إِذَا زَادَ الشَّيْءُ عَنْ حُدُّهِ انْقَلَبَ إِلَى ضِدِّهِ which translates as: "If something passes its limit, it changes into its opposite" We don't want our children to dislike reading Quraan, literacy or numeracy. Sometimes, in order to keep them interested we may need to let them partake in activities which may seem to us as frivolous, but as long as it is not Haraam, it serves to assist them in achieving their goals. The Prophet (peace be upon him) said:

"Make things easy for the people, and do not make it difficult for them, and make them calm (with glad tidings) and do not repulse (them)." (Sahih Al-Bukhari).

These are but some humble words of advice gained through experience, may Allaah SWT forgive us for our shortcomings and reward us for our good intentions.
